STEWARDSHIP

Stewardship is much more than a fancy way to say financial giving to the church.

As God's Stewards, we have three responsibilities: Receiving, managing and giving. We receive the many gifts God grants us. We manage what we are granted and for our own good and the good of others. We give out of gratitude and share with others the gifts that we receive and manage. These gifts are our time, our abilities, and our resources.

Our Time: The time we have is a gift from God. Managing it is a matter of stewardship. Some live frantically busy lives, some sit around, others spend all their time serving others at the expense of their own needs, while still others spend their time only for themselves. As Christian Stewards, we should try to manage our time to live a balanced life.

Our Abilities: We each receive distinct gifts, skills, and talents from God. Developing our current and new skills and talents while using and sharing these gifts is part of good stewardship.

Our Resources: Stewardship encompasses what we earn and how we use it, in addition to how we save, spend, and give it away once we have earned it. A good steward is a wise and generous manager of these resources.
